EGO MANIA!

Anibel Ng-Conwell creates artistic, edgy jewels that make you go bold. —Jennifer Barger

Two years living in Korea made Alexandria jewelry designer Anibel Ng-Conwell fall in love with its mashup of minimalism and maximum-impact style. "Everything [there] is about fashion, from shops in the train stations to residents who have no fear about wearing anything," she says. That passion shines in Ng-Conwell's simple yet sophisticated Egolord line (egolord.com)—think a lightweight but dramatic crinkled silver cuff. She says the experimental architecture influenced her: Most pieces are one-offs, and her materials and shapes are evolving faster than a K-pop beat. "My jewelry is for people who are confident, but it gives confidence too," she says. "It's [for] clients who dress outside the box." Try on her closer-to-home picks.

"Steadfast Supply sells local brand Nourish & Refine, which has a collection of crystals. I use crystals and stones all over the house for positive energy."

"If there's a store in DC that defines my aesthetic, that would be Relish. Things there are minimalist with a twist, like this Sacai dress. It's simple but powerful."
