MY CITY

STYLE COUNCIL

Lengths of colorful nautical rope, dappled chunks of jasper and orbs of wood star in Sarah Mags Bayot's mod-meets-elegant jewelry brand, Kicheko Goods (kichekogoods.com). Since founding the line (sold at Salt & Sundry, Steadfast Supply and online), Bayot has built a following by blending organic materials with sophisticated shapes. "I try to speak to minimalism, but in a very natural, mixed-media way," says Bayot. "Kicheko," which means smiling and laughter in Swahili, is a nod to Bayot's larger missionusing part of the proceeds to fund scholarships for children in the Republic of Congo. Here are Bayot's DC faves. –Jennifer Barger

JUST DANCE ↑ "My husband and I danced on a college hip-hop dance team! Eighteenth Street Lounge (1212 18th St. NW, eighteenthstreetlounge.com) is our go-to-spot for funk, hip-hop and house music."

LOUNGE LIFE

ON THE HUNT

When Holly Hunt was in town in April at the Washington Design Center, she unveiled her new collection of outdoor furniture. The line, known as Moray, was inspired by aquatic animals, and it features woven surfaces on bronze or silver metal. "Our goal was to create a more sophisticated design language for outdoor products," Hunt says. The chair, chaise lounges and tables all adhere to Hunt's affinity for modern designs while sticking to what has made her famous: a brilliant combination of chic taste and utility. Prices upon request, Washington Design Center, 1099 14th St. NW, hollyhunt.com—Michael McCarthy cohesive palette too."